About AST

Since the first successful kidney transplant between identical twins in 1954, science and technology have continually advanced the field of organ transplantation to offer patients prolonged life, but the number of people suffering from organ failure far outnumbers the supply of new organs. As medicine today allows people to live longer, the age-related risks for organ failure will also continue to rise.

Founded in 1982, the American Society of Transplantation (AST) is a diverse organization of more than 4,300 professionals dedicated to advancing the field of transplantation and improving patient care by promoting research, education, advocacy, organ donation, and service to the community through the lens of equity and inclusion. The Society is the largest transplant organization in North America and is recognized as the premier society for transplantation. Beginning as a professional member-based society, AST has recently expanded its efforts to engage with the transplant patient community through live events, social media, and educational resources. To ensure the sustainability and breadth of these efforts, AST is looking to partner with external stakeholders who are equally as committed to the transplant community.
